Plastic is the most prevalent type of marine debris found in our ocean and Great Lakes. Plastic debris can come in all shapes and sizes, but those that are less than five millimeters in length (or about the size of a sesame seed) are called "microplastics."

Microplastics also get into the marine environment via storm sewers, wind, and currents (Zalasiewicz et al., 2016, Murphy et al., 2016). Some are transported out to sea via runoff (Cole et al., 2011), while the degradation of macroplastic debris is another source and the route is often sea recycling ports and landfills where adverse weather situations aid in macroplastic dumping at sea shores.
